

Philippines continue to rule. Wind might be a factor

After a crazy night of partying where Pottsy was so drunk he had to be carried home and Patrick was table dancing in his red SeXXXpensive thong, there were many hangovers this morning.

Nevertheless, the Philippines Open team is still clearly dominant in the Open division but in the Mixed division the Australian team lost on Universe point to the Philippines. This indicated that the team is starting to gel and tomorrow's game is still very open. A nearby typhoon which is expected to hit Manila Saturday is increasing the wind substantially and might have an influence on the games tomorrow. If it gets too windy there is talk about moving the fields to a more protected part of the island. We'll see. Now it is back to the party....